

Meghan Cassidy is a data analyst by day, and a naturalist, photographer, and a strong advocate of everything in class Arachnida by night. She can often be found in Texas parks taking macro photography of small critters such as spiders and insects, or hosting nighttime spider walks. Some of her photos have been published in journals and books, such as an upcoming publication from Texas A&M Press titled “Mindful of Texas Nature” – a project with author & herpetologist Michael Smith. Some of you may also know her as “wildcarrot” on iNaturalist®, and chances are she’s identified your spiders!